The German Advance.

During the past two days the German offensive has developed into a formidable movement south-west towards Paris on the whole front of forty miles between the Oise and the Marne. The enemy have so far made no attempt to cross the latter river, which in this part of its course is a serious obstacle. Instead they have formed a flank on their ten mile front on the Marne, and diverted their main effort towards the south-west, while at the same time they have endeavoured by action towards the south-east to enlarge the salient which they had driven in to the Marne. That salient on Saturday was the deepest in proportion to its width that there has been in the whole course of the war. The effective opening into this salient between Soissons in the west and Rheims in the east was no more than thirty-five miles wide, while the depth of penetration of the salient south to the Marne was over twenty miles. Such a pronounced salient possessed obvious disabilities, especially when at its apex it encountered such resistance as is offered by the obstacle of the Marne; and it was certain that, in default of passage across the Marne, the enemy would direct their next efforts to widening this salient. Efforts of such a kind were a necessity imposed upon them by the development of the situation. It is clear, however, that, accepting this necessity, they are directing their main efforts in great strength on the south-western front of the salient not only because they can manœuvre more readily in this direction, but also with the deliberate intention of menacing the French capital.

The reports of the past two days' fighting are, therefore, in sum the record of the enemy's efforts to widen their salient, especially towards the south-west, and of the counter-efforts of the Allies to keep the salient as confined as possible. So long as the Allies hold their positions immediately in front of Rheims the effective opening into the salient is limited to the space of thirty-five miles between those cities. In these circumstances the enemy first sought to enlarge the base of the salient on either flank. On the right flank, between Soissons and the Oise, they delivered heavy attacks against the French, who, wheeling on their positions behind Soissons, fell back a short distance down the Oise to about ten miles from Compiegne. West and south of Soissons, however, the French not only maintained their positions, but in repeated counter-attacks drove back the enemy, so that at the Soissons end of the effective base of their salient the Germans failed to enlarge the opening. Meanwhile on the left flank of their salient, at the Rheims end, the enemy attempted to break that pivot of Allied resistance by attacking the city, now enclosed in an acute angle, from the south-eastern side. Here they penetrated to La Pompelle fort, but were driven out again by a counter-attack, so that before Rheims also their effort to enlarge the base of their salient had failed. During Saturday night and yesterday, therefore, the enemy directed their main pressure against the sides of the salient, most heavily towards the south-west between Soissons and the Marne at Château Thierry, and also towards the south-east between Rheims and the Marne at Dormans. They have made progress in both directions, especially towards the south-west, but in either direction they are now able to advance but slowly in the face of an increasingly obstinate resistance.

On the Allied right, between the Marne and Rheims, there is little change in the situation. Rheims, in defiance of all reasonable probability, is still held, and between the city and river the Germans, in fierce fighting, have won very little ground. Their main effort, however, is directed against the Allied left, between Soissons and the Marne. Failing to shake the pivot of the French positions behind Soissons by their action between that city and the Oise, and failing also to carry these positions by frontal assault, the enemy are now throwing their weight heavily westwards along the north bank of the Marne. Their concentration of effort in this direction, which has gained a good deal of ground, is clearly designed to turn the flanking wall which the French have established in rear of Soissons, and, by breaking that centre of resistance, to create for themselves freedom of manœuvre on the whole front between the Oise and the Marne for a great thrust at Paris. Though a certain check has been imposed upon the enemy's advance, therefore, the situation remains anxious. It is estimated that they have over thirty divisions in reserve which have not yet been engaged. General Foch has large reserves intact, but a delicate problem confronts him in the use of them. He may elect to dribble in merely enough divisions to restore equilibrium. In that case, however, at the end of their present movement the enemy will lie disposed on a broad arc from the centre of which they can menace Amiens and Paris alike from a front uncomfortably near to both. Only a counter-offensive in strength can completely restore the situation in the Allies' favour, but only the Generalissimo can decide when the enemy's hand is sufficiently exposed to justify the launching of such a movement with reasonable hope of success. The decision when a counter-offensive should be delivered is the supreme test of generalship. No commander is more imbued with the spirit of the offensive than General Foch, and, if he should still hold his hand, we may be satisfied that he does so in the conviction that nothing vital will be lost by restraint.

Belgian Refugees.

The Belgian refugees in the United Kingdom may be "strangers within the gates," but they are not ungrateful strangers, nor are they idle. The report which the official committee in London has transmitted to the Belgian Home Secretary, even if there was no other evidence, makes those two facts clear. It appears that there are still 170,000 refugees domiciled in Great Britain and Ireland, of whom 60,000 are living in the London area. More than 80 per cent. of them have found employment; and about 40,000 are working in munition factories. The unemployed are nearly all either too old or too young to work. Thus nearly all the refugees are now self-supporting, and the demands on the funds organised for their relief have been reduced to a minimum. Very few of the men are capable of bearing arms. The report states that up to date more than 30,000 men—the equivalent of three Belgian divisions—have appeared before the recruiting authorities since August, 1914. It is interesting to note how the refugees have adapted themselves to their altered circumstances. During the past three years they have erected their own factories from which they have made important contributions to the supply of munitions; they have organised over two hundred schools, in which the children receive instruction from teachers of their own nationality; they have arranged for the publication of Belgian newspapers in England; and they have formed a great number of committees to provide comforts for their troops at the front, and for the relief of their less fortunate compatriots who could not escape from the invaded territory, and have been treated with such brutality by the common enemy. That is a remarkable record, and one of which they can be justly proud. It evokes when we remember that it has been achieved by men and women who passed through the terrible experiences that they had to endure. As the committee state, little Belgium has been established in the United Kingdom, "a Belgium that has been able to breathe freely, that has preserved her ancient traditions and the quiet and courageous endurance which enables the country to bear stoically the most tragic crisis in her history." The report acknowledges with deep gratitude the kindly welcome which the exiles received, and pays a tribute to the unconquerable energy with which the British nation is fighting to restore them their liberty and independence.

The Gooseberry Crop.

Everything points to a heavy fruit crop in Ireland, but the conditions in England and Wales are not so satisfactory. The English Board of Agriculture reports that the average yield of gooseberries will be abnormally low, and that the yield of other soft fruit crops is not likely to be more than moderate. The Food Controller has, therefore, taken steps to secure the bulk of the gooseberry crop for jam manufacture, and has issued an Order limiting the conditions under which the fruit may be sold. One result of the Order will be to deprive the public of practically any opportunity of obtaining fresh gooseberries. This will cause some disappointment. It is essential, however, that the supplies of jam for the Army should be kept up, and Lord Rhondda states that the measures he has taken represent the only method by which they can be maintained. He hopes that there will be a sufficient surplus to meet the demands of the civil population for preserves. The price of the berries has been fixed at 27s. per cwt. free on rail, and a grower may not sell to any person other than a licensed jam manufacturer or a recognised fruit salesman who has undertaken that he will re-sell the fruit to the holder of a licence. The latter provision clearly controls the export of gooseberries from Ireland. Growers who have less than five cwts. of gooseberries are not affected by the Order, and the restrictions as to prices do not apply to sales by retail of five lbs. or less. The Director of Sugar Distribution has issued a statement pointing out that, if persons who have applied for sugar for preserving home-grown fruit find that the fruit upon which they based their applications is not likely to be available, they should return their permits to buy sugar to the local Food Control Committees for revision. One of the difficulties with which jam manufacturers are faced is a shortage of jars. The National Salvage Council has issued an appeal to housewives to dispose of all jars they do not require to dealers.

IRISHMEN IN THE HONOURS LIST.

The names of Irishmen in the Birthday Honours' list, published to-day, are comparatively few. Amongst the honours conferred are a Knighthood of St. Patrick, Lord Ormonmore and Browne, who has received this honour, is a representative peer for Ireland and was a member of the Irish Convention.

The Earl of Donoughmore, who has been honoured with a Privy Councillorship, was Under-Secretary of State for War 1903-5, and since 1914 has been engaged in important war work. He accompanied the Secretary for India on his recent visit to the East, and has been honoured for special services in connection with that mission.

Lord Decies, who becomes a member of the Irish Privy Council, is head of the Press Censor's Department in Ireland.

The other recipient of a similar honour, Mr. A. W. Samuels, K.C., M.P., was appointed Attorney-General for Ireland upon the elevation to the Bench of Mr. Justice O'Connor.

The inclusion of Mr. R. Dowse's name in the list of those who receive the C.B. is a recognition of his services as Private Secretary to various Lord-Lieutenants, including Lord Wimborne and Viscount French.

The Chief Secretary on Saturday received a deputation at Dublin Castle from the Irish National Teachers' Association in reference to the Committee of Inquiry into the teachers' claims, and in regard to an increased war bonus, both for those in the service and those not serving. The deputation consisted of—Miss Doyle, B.A., and Messrs. R. Judge, President, and O'Connell, General Secretary. The Chief Secretary, who was accompanied by Sir William Byrne, Under-Secretary, promised to give sympathetic consideration to the matters brought by the deputation. The teachers subsequently expressed satisfaction with the interview.

EELS AS A FOOD SUPPLY.

The Fresh Water Fish Committee wish it to be widely known that the culture of eels is of considerable importance. They therefore, ask that owners or lessees of waters, especially those suitable for eels, such as sluices, with outlets of lakes, etc., will endeavour to instal fixed eel-pots, or non-existent at present, to repair or operate them so that their full capacity if they exist but are not now in use. The Committee is prepared to offer advice as to installation and operation, to make enquiries for traps and in special circumstances to assist financially with compensation on terms to be agreed upon. Communications should be addressed to the Hon. S. Northcote, 54a Parliament street, London, S.W. 1.

PETROL FINES.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE IRISH TIMES.

SIR,—As a motorist who has striven to do his duty to observe the petrol regulations, I have viewed with astonishment the continued use of cars by all and sundry in Dublin and the country, and also the, to my mind, ridiculous fines imposed on magistrates (particularly in Dublin City) in cases brought before them.

What does the owner of a car who can afford to run it under present conditions, with petrol, I believe, about 2s. per gal., care for a fine of £5 or £10? Probably, too, he (or she) has had the car running for hundreds of miles without being "apprehended."

In my innocence I thought that petrol was required to win the war, and that, in using it, we were handicapping our fighting men. Apparently our magistrates must think otherwise. If the petrol is wanted for the Army, as we have been assured, it is not deplorable that, when our very existence is at stake, petrol should be lavishly used for purposes which can be avoided, our authorities will not stop its improper use?

One of 10s., by a magistrate, or the reduction of the fine to 2s. 6d., by the Recorder, is an absolute farce, and it makes one despair of England's authority so sadly lacking in appreciation of the position.—Yours, etc.,

QUONDAM MOTORIST.

PRISONERS OF WAR MATINEE.

There was a large audience, in spite of the attractions of the open air, at the matinée held at the Theatre Royal, Dublin, on Saturday on aid of the R.D.F. Prisoners of War Fund. Dramatic fare occupied the greater part of the afternoon. After a pleasing selection by the theatre orchestra the one-act play, "A Sheep in Wolf's Clothing," was presented. The story is one of the stirring times of 1605 when Ireland was kept in a ferment, and the incidents were represented with fair dramatic skill. Several members of the cast did not seem quite to realise the gravity of elocution called for by the stage, and especially on so large a theatre. But fault, however, could not be laid in the door of Captain R. B. Downes, Q.O.O.H., who made an excellent Colonel Kirk. The part whose care is as much for his own interests as for those of Dublin (Dublin!) formed the piece of work was the character of Mrs. Owen Lewis, who struck just the right note of dignified grief; while Miss Kathleen Lloyd made an attractive Mrs. Carew, and Miss Eileen Wely, Lieutenant Calder, and Miss Measar, who took a part at almost an hour's notice. A word of warm praise must be given to the artistic staging of the piece. An artistic setting also was that of "The Heart of a Clown," a phantasy, of which the scene is the outskirts of a village fair. The rural setting was distinctly a pretty production. The Marchioness of Headfort placed successfully the part of a Columbine who has the heart, and seems to choose the true devotion of an elderly clown to the moon-lit affections of a Harlequin, in spite of the prophecies of the gipsy's crystal. "Rose in Parsley," and a dance by Columbine and Harlequin were introduced by the pierce sisters, Miss Phyllis Wakely sustained the part of the gipsy and Sergeant Northall, H.L.I., and Mr. S. W. Maddock, respectively, those of harlequin and clown. Quite a nice feature of the programme was the contribution of Miss May Laffan, who, having played a lively selection on the banjo, showed herself a welcome vocalist in a well-chosen song with a catchy rythm, and some amusing words in the part of "Rosaline," which looks for youngsters, who won't go to bed. Mr. Claude Fetcher demonstrated his ability with the crayon in a number of amusing lightning sketches, and the matinée was brought to a conclusion with a lively performance of "The Courting of Cis," Widow Malone,"

This Year's Cotton Fabrics

are exceedingly beautiful productions

We don't think we ever missed our fine windows so much as since these fabrics came in, because they are so well worth displaying. They are in full ranges of the most delicate and beautiful colourings, and in a multitude of very effective and dainty designs. From the selection below can be chosen a fabric to suit every purpose, and you would be indeed well advised to secure several lengths of them while the present prices hold. We have been remarkably fortunate in securing so wide a stock, but we feel that the present prices cannot long be maintained. In any case, be sure you order the FULL LENGTH REQUIRED—we cannot promise to give you an extra yard afterwards, as the patterns were ordered months ago, and are now irreplaceable.

WEEKLY TRADE REVIEW.

The burdens of the mercantile community continue increasingly to grow heavier and more difficult. Daily evidence is afforded of the startling manner in which all freights have been advanced substantially, and new tenders, privilege tickets over Irish lines are being withdrawn. The effect of this is to create a social tavern and the public have to pay 50 per cent. more for their beer. We have yet to learn what the new postal tariff now operative will entail in the way of increased charges for the various commitments, covering samples, parcels, book-packages, &c., throughout the country. The expenses of business, wholesale and retail, are thereby to become enormously inflated, and there still remains the prospect of further increases in the income-tax assessments. On industrial markets orders are still plentiful enough, but the fact that there is not a plentiful enough in all branches. Control of raw materials, and the difficulty of getting delivery are the controlling factors. Unsatisfied demand ought to be obtainable at much cheaper rates than are generally charged by city retailers.

LAW REPORTS.

IMPORTANT MUNITIONS APPEALS.

Mr. Justice Fitz sat in the Bankruptcy Court, Dublin, on Saturday, and resumed and concluded the hearing of interesting appeals as to the terms of employment of men engaged in shipbuilding yards. There were two cases, one in which Messrs. Harland and Wolff are appellants, and Andrew Boyle and others are respondents, and the other in which the North of Ireland Shipbuilding Company are appellants, and Charles Meehan and Patrick Harkin are respondents. The number of men affected by the point at issue was stated to be close on 2,000. The matter was originated at the Local Munitions Tribunal, under Section 3 of the Munitions Act of 1917, where a class of unskilled workmen, known as platers' helpers, claimed to be paid full wages when disemployed owing to a strike of skilled platers, or to be paid a week's wages in lieu of notice. The Local Munitions Tribunal had given a decision in favour of the claim of the men, and the proprietors of the yards appealed, contending that the section did not apply to the present cases, as they were not responsible for the disemployment of the men, it having been caused by the strike of the platers.

Mr. Andrews, K.C., and Mr. H. M. Thompson (instructed by Messrs. Carson and McDowell) appeared for Messrs. Harland and Wolff, Mr. Babington, K.C. (instructed by Messrs. Todd and Mark), for the North of Ireland Shipbuilding Co.; and Mr. Hanna, K.C., and Mr. S. C. Porter (instructed by Mr. W. E. Gibson), for the United Kingdom Society of Amalgamated Smiths and Strikers, and the Amalgamated Union of Labour.

Mr. Hanna, K.C., in reply to the Judge, admitted that before the war the employers had certain privileges. Acts were then passed to make it as difficult as possible for either the master or men to bring about a discontinuance of work.

Mr. Justice Fitz said in the present cases the employers had no wish to give the helpers on the occasion in question.

Mr. Hanna said the men were not responsible for the strike which caused the stoppage of work. The employers should, he contended, have given notice to these men. A great injustice would be caused to them if the Act of 1917 was construed as had been suggested on behalf of the appellants.

Mr. Justice Fitz said he could not be aware of the injury, however grave it might be. His duty was to get at the law. He reserved judgment.
